Chapter authors wanted for new book

Professor David Favre of the Michigan State University College of Law and Raj Panjwani (attorney in India) are looking for chapter authors for a book on the wildlife laws of various countries around the world. They are working on a project as members of the Animal Law Section of TIPS within the American Bar Association. When the book is completed it will be an ABA publication. They hope to use a comparative organization of the chapters so the reader can determine how various countries approach an assortment of wildlife topics, touching upon such topics as: commercial wildlife use, sport hunting, species protection, obligations under international treaties, individual animal welfare concerns, habitat protection, management structure, delegation of responsibility to local government, issues litigated in the courts, and any special access to wildlife by indigenous peoples.

If anyone is interested in this project please contact either Professor Favre (favre@law.msu.edu) or Mr Panjwani (Raip339@rediffmail.com)

Help Wanted

Lawyers are being sought to sit on the board of the Mayhew Animal Home and Humane Education Centre, in Kensal Green, North West London.

There are currently two vacancies on the board. These are honorary positions and the main commitment is attendance at the board's monthly meeting which takes place at the centre on a weekday evening.

The board is particularly interested in improving animal conditions overseas and is currently involved in projects in Afghanistan, Egypt and Russia.
